

Home hero Leandri bidding for strong ERC run

Jean-Mathieu Leandri will be hoping that home advantage will boost his chances of a strong result on round five of the FIA European Rally Championship.

The rising Corsican star will be taking part on the legendary Giru di Corsica-Tour de Corse for the third time and is the highest-seeded local driver in the Saintéloc Racing Peugeot 207 Super 2000 he shares with Belgian navigator Renaud Jamoul. "I really want to do well in front of my friends and family," said Leandri. "I am really used to driving on these roads. It's a route I know well, which I like and is well suited to me. Also I know the car very well now so everything has come together to enable me to put in a good performance. I also have the advantage of benefiting from the Peugeot Rally Academy drivers Jérémi Ancian and Craig Breen. This is a big plus." Leandri's local knowledge has taught him an important lesson about the demanding island stages: "The stages are long and hazardous so you have got to stay concentrated all the time. The quality of the opposition is very strong so I need to fight hard to do well. But I am just very impatient to get going and feel so motivated by driving at home."
